This gentleman was for some time in the Civil Service of the Colony and knows perfectly well the forms to be observed in addressing the head of the Government. Instead of sending his letter through the Colonial Secretary or Registrar-General, however, he sent it to His Excellency direct, and used language in it that cannot be characterised as anything less than importinent. He tells His Excellency that his action is creating a sense of want of confidence in the Government's dealing with the Chinese that has not been displayed in the past history of the Colony. The mental taint in this family came from some remote ancestor, and was intensified by their recognition of it until it became a controlling force: and the ring was accepted as imposing upon its possessor the obligation to commit spicide, after the example of the person who last wore it. This form of monia usually originates in a disorder of the nervous system, Captain L. M. He tossed and tumbled on his bed, wondering if morning would ever dawn again. In this case it was not an accusing conscience, as he had committed no offence; the cause was purely physical one—yet, all too common in England—indigestion and dyspepsia, with the long chain lapse among them. He relates that his skin and eyes had been more or less discoloured for years, often of a ghastly and repulsive yellow. This was due to the presence of bile in the blood and tissues, FIHE Steamship where it had no business to be. The author of this letter consents to the publication of so much of it as is here printed, but declines to allow the use of his name, at least for the present, for reasons we are bound to respect. But the evident sincerity of his story will carry conviction to every candid mind.

CHAPTER IX.

L'HOMME PROPOSE. Lilias Brocket hugged herself with content ment at having diplomatised, as she fancied, so very dexterously. Little did she imagine that her very covness had converted an admirar into a lover. Still less did she realise the difficulty of l keeping matters between herself and an antograt he type of John Crucival on a Platonic basis. Perhaps the remembrance of a single flash in his small, inexpressive, unromentic eye may have disturbed the current of her self-satisfaction, for she decided on Sunday evening not to "I bad better give the man a broad hint," she whispered to herself, as she retired to rest. • But on the Monday morning at breakfast, Captain Allister cried to her across the tablecoffee "I say, Lil. So the die is cast! Well my dear girl, believe me, it's all for the best, for you if not for the youngster. Not that I forgive him. If ever we meet he shall have the rough
